THE JETTY SYSTEM- OBSERVATIONS OF CAPexamine the improvemen's at the mouths of the various rivers on the, continent, in an interview, yesterday, gr.ve much interesting information regarding his observations. He visited the Meuse, Oder, Vipper, Stolpe, Vistula, Pregel, Daunbe, Rhine, and other rivers where the jetty system is in use, and found it successful in every instance, the depth of channel in these rivers having been increased from seven to fifteen feet. The jetties at Sulina, the mouth of the Danube, have been so great a success that St. George's channel, which discharges four times as much water as the Sulina, is to be improved in the same manner; and the Russisn Government is preparing to adopt the same plan on the Volga, Divina, and Neva. On the latter stream are to be five miles of jetties, which will give a depth of twentyfour feet and enable the largest vessels to reach St. Petersburgh. At the mouth of the Rhone, where it has been stated the jettles had proved a failure, Captain Eades found that the jetties had never been tried, but that simple embankments had been thrown up along the river banks for the purpose of closing some lateral outlets. These embankments do not extend within half a mile of the mouth of the river, and are seveneighths of a mile from the bar. The engineer in charge expressed the opinion that if they were extended to or beyond the bar the desired depth of channel would be obtained. Captain Eades found the jetty system in great favor with engineers whom he met on his trip, and comes home greatly strengthened in his convictions that the mouth of the Mississippi should be improved by jetties, and will at once commence vigorous efforts to secure the adoption of that system by Congress.

GOING BACK TO THE GOOD OLD TIMES-A REFRESHING ENTERTAINMENT AT THE WOOD-LAND-AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH .-[Cleveland Leader.]-In the round of the hops," "Germans," lectures, concerts, and other modern entertainments gotten up to pass away evenings that might otherwise be given to idleness, it is as refreshing as a gust of north wind to hear of a crowd of people, young and old, in the beginning of the winter's gayeties, going back to first principles and turning a sociable into an old-fashioned "spelling-school." Yet that was what was done on Tuesday evening at the Woodland-Avenue Presbyterian church, and the experiment was fraught with such enjoyment that the parties interested propose to try it again at some future time. It may be that this is a revolution rather than an experiment, and that soon city spelling-schools will be as fashionable as they once were in the sparely-settled regions around the old log school-houses.

"Sides" were chosen, and the battle began at an early hour. Mr. James, supervising principal of the East Side schools, gave out the words, and for a long time the contest waged eagerly. The contestants burnished up their rusty memories, and were carried back to the days of dog-eared spelling-books and ransacked dictionaries. It was a time of jaw-breaking. Verbal cannons were shot off at hapless wights, who went down in the storm like leaves in the autumn blast. Many a gallant struggle only ended in defeat, and many were the words that were twisted into shapes undreamed of by a handful of plunging yet hopeful "spellers" breasted the flood of unnamable words poured at them by the merciless James, who felt very much in his element. At last one "side" went down completely, the honors being carried off in that division by Harry Stancombe, a High-school boy. But Harry gave way at last, and the other side of the bouse had it all to themselves. A gallant fight was made, one gentleman, who occupies the pulpit, struggling hopefully to the end, but being compelled to give up at last. The honors of the occacourse had to an ominous blue book that Mr. James carried about with him, it is supposed for the intimidation of dull scholars. With mush-and-milk sociables and spelling-schools it seems as if the city was becoming regenerated and tending back to the pure days of old.

A STRANGE STORY .- [Davenport (Iowa) Gazette.]-Thirteen years ago a young man wooed and won a young lady in a village not far from Davenport. The parents of the girl objected, and there was a deal of trouble; but finally the couple were married at the home of the bride. Three months after, the bridegroom desired to move to California, but the family of his wife opposed her emigration, and the result was that the husband started for the Pacific coast without her. After the first six months no tidings from her husband were received, and in less than a year news came that he was dead. In 1963 the widow married a young man who had recently arrived from Germany; and her second hasband was entirely ignorant of the fact that his bride was a widew. But where "ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise." Shortly after the marriage the busband purchased a farm in Scott county, and on that farm the couple have lived ever since, and several children have blessed their

A SUCCESSFUL AMERICAN GIRL-[Lucy Hooper, in Philadelphia Press.]-Paris, November 6.- * Does any one of our opera-goers remember Miss Elise Hensler, who some years ago made her appearance on our operatic boards, and who, after a brief season of success, sailed for Europe and returned no more? > A OURSON CONTEST .- Early on Sunday morning a gentleman walked out, probably for the purpose of salting his sheep. After a few vigorous calls the flock collected around him and clamored as usual for their allowance. One old black ram, however, seemed to have something on his mind, and ate him, approached and laid his hand upon rious charge, which was repeated until the owner took to flight. But he was too far from the fence, and the enemy literally hung upon his rear with persevering obstinacy. A change of front was resolved upon and immediately effected, but still the battery was played with undiminished fervor. Soon the parties clinched, and after a vigorous scuffle they came to the ground. The ram could now do nothing, but his fleece protected his ribs from the furious blows of his adversary. Both seemed now pretty nearly exhausted. The man was on top, and seizing a stone which lay near, commenced pounding the bead of the sheep. Of course the rock was soon reduced to fragments; but the man, having formerly driven bogs, thought of the expedient of throwing dust in the eyes of the recusant ram, and incontinently filled his optics with clay, rubbing it in. He then arose to enjoy the success of his ruse; but the ram "riz" too, paused a single moment, applied a knee to either eye and renewed the combat. And now the fight was more desperate than before, and victory seemed to perch above the sheep. But as he put all his power into one final blow his almost fainting antagonist succeeded in avoiding the shock and catching the ram by the tail; and now the tide of victory turned. A succession of furious kicks, administered a posteriori, decided the contest. The ram cried foul play, but the adversary fought for conquest. At length the "tail-hold slipped," and both parties fled in opposite directions. They will probably "fight another day." Standford (Ky.) Journal.

THE ABLE BODIED STYLE OF DYING IN OP-ERA .- Italian opera is the extremest product of modern civilization. It is not the highest, God forbid! but the production of it, the support, and, above all, the enjoyment of it, shows that those by whom it is produced, supported, and enjoyed, have reached a condition of social effervescence beyond made an important difference with the meanwhich no people have yet bloomed or burgeoned-perhaps beyond which there is hope 1870, providing for the abolishing of school of fruit of the socially exquisite sort. A NEW ENTERPRISE .- For me nothing is more interesting than to see a man in the first intense strain of a new enterprise; it may be a new cider-mill; it may be a new newspaper. It is a great crisis in that man's life. He lives thirty days in one. Old, trite proverbs take on new and startling meanings. He looks upon all men and all things in a strange, new light. He judges all men and all things with regard to the accomplishment of his one supreme design. During a certain time the stars in their courses fight pleasant stories of his make-shifts and abcorption; and now, when he sees another and younger person starting his cider-mill, with the old, outworn enthusiasm, he looks on with the same half-sympathetic, half-cynical interest with which an old married couple contemplate two young people who have just fallen in love .- " The Old Cabinet" --Sousbner's for December.

The pendulum seems to have swung back again. John Stuart Mill, being dead, has spokez of religion in a manner which has shocked those of his disciples who believed Fitzjames Stephen has called especial attention to the fact that he is of opinion that the weight of evider ce is in favor of the hypothesis that there is a God, who is very wise and exceedingly powerful, but who, in Mr. Fitz-james Stephen's belief, is not altogether benevolent. And to crown all, Professor Huxley, to the infinite prief of some of his former admirers, has come forward to say that be must not be numb ered among "fatalistic, materialistic, or atheistic philosophers."

This seems to say distinctly that the Governor shall not have power to pardon traitors and murderers until after the end of the next session of Asto follow that he may may pardon murderquestion as to what the Constitution really tion between several gentlemen in the State Abell, of West Haven, was of the opinion that the Constitution did not intend to give the power of pardon to the Governor at any found in a volume of Vermont reports an The point was speedily settled by the proprinted copy of the Constitution (printed at plainly parenthetical, and the meaning is as plain as if it read : He shall have power to grant reprieves (but not to pardon) until after the end of the next session; or he shall have power to grant reprieves until after the end of the next session, but not to pardon. When the Constitution was next printed, a year or two later, the comma was omitted, doubtless by a careless proof-reader, and from then till now our Constitution has never been correctly printed. This is not the first case in which a careless omission or substitution of a comma has ing and construction of a law. The act of the State acted on the question.

FUN FROM PHILADELPHIA-STATE OFFI-CIALS AT A MINSTREL SHOW .- One of our leading citizens, who recently returned from Philadelphia, tells a little story which proves the truth of the old adage, "many a true word is said in jest." It appears some days since Governor Hartranft; Bob Mackey, Quay, and some half a dozen other prominent politicians, met in the city of Brotherly Love. The question of how the evening should be spent came up for discussion, and it was suggested that the party should visit Birch's minstrels. This proposition was readily agreed to, and a boy was dispatched to buy tickets for the distinguished party. When the messenger arrived at the boxsurprise, and, in his curiosity, the treasurer asked who they were for. The boy informed him that Governor Hartranft, Mr. Mackey. &c., had determined to visit the theatre that evening. As a matter of course, the result was that seats were reserved for the party in the very front row.

The news of the intended visit of this distinguished party was at once communicated to the management, and it was determined to have some fun at the expense of the leading politicians of the State.

Promptly at 8 o'clock the party arrived. and were taken to their seats by a gentle-manly usher. The first part of the perform-ance, consisting of songs and jokes, was thoroughly enjoyed by the gentlemen, and the curtain baving descended, was in a few minutes rung up for the second part. As it rolled up, and the stage came into view, an aged darky was seen seated at a desk, with a huge rattan in his hand and a collection of books before him. Across the scene was the inscription "School for Boys." In a minute in came a number of badly-clothed, dilapidated colored boys, who took their seats on benches opposite the old man's desk. Having rapped for order, the schoolmaster began to call the rell. He did it in this wise: "John F. Hartranft, stand up;" "Bob Mackey, get up dar;" "Come 'ere, Quay;" "Errett, come to de front;" and so on until he had called the names of all the gentlemen who were occupying the seats in the front row. The audience, which was a crowded one, soon found out where the joke came in, and as they picked out one and another of the gentlemen whose names were being called the applause became exceedingly uproarious. When the names of all the distinguished visitors had been in this way announced there was still one person left sitting on the

Said the schoolmaster: "Is John W. Fornev here?" Chorus of scholars : "Yes, sah."

"Where is he?" The pupils turned and pointed to the colored individual still seated on the bench. "You, John W. Forney, stan' up."

"No I won't." "Stan' up directly and join your class."

"No I won't." "If you don't get up and get into the ring you'll never get a cent as long as you

The hit was taken in an instant by the audience, and cheers burst forth all over the house. So general was the applause that the act had to be repeated before the people would be satisfied, It is said the only persons in the house who did not enjoy it were the occupants of that front row of Getting a Living. Very dear to my heart is a certain bit of writing by a Frenchman, whose name I can-not recall. He looks into the window of a small jewelry shop, and tries to make out in his mind how the jeweller gets his living. Suppose he should sell this ring before Sunday, and that breastpin next week; even if he sell this and that, how can it be enough, for they have cost him at least so much, and the profit is not large surely, and there is the rent and the fuel; and the family may be composed of two, three, four. How does the jeweller get his living? It runs on in some such way as that just how I cannot tell, for I never read it, and only remember

The trouble was that the prices were so low that only economical people went there, and these dined so parsimoniously, excluded so rigidly those little dainties which make a large part of the profit, that there was hardly any money in the business. There is such a thing, you see, as an unprofitable encouragement of economy. I never saw a single soul going into the music-store above Third street, so I was not surprised when the worst came to pass. But I cannot tell you how hard it went with me to look at them carry out the sheet-music in piles and load it on a wagon. It seemed to me that sheet-music was a kind of property not to be converted into money with great dispatch. turning an old wallz into Strauss's nasce, to of melting over "Old Dog Tray" into "The Heart that Thou Gavest."

Yes, and even in your grand wholesale stores it is dreadfully depressing to see the salesmen with their coats off standing idly about the doors with that pathetic endeavor of theirs to look busy and brisk.

Thave sometimes thought that the most desirable way of getting a living (next to writing subscription books) was to keep some kind of a movable stand in a city like New York. The idleness of the rich man and the overwork of the poor man are alike unenduint rable. The young Italian who keeps an apple-stand on the corner of Oliver and Alianthus streets seems to have united in his life the pleasures of work and the pleasures of idleness. Though I passed that way, many months ago, and have seen him but once, the picture of him in my mind represents to me the fortunate occupation. He was sitting on a fire-plug,—a resting-place which had been no expense to him whatever—his feet an open consecutively or at interval as possed before him, and he was smoking a pipe. He sold enough from his stand to pay for his lodging, his food, and his tobacco; and I am sure, from the expression of his connect and of his figure, that he was without carr, and happy.

There is another fate for a man of work, which is fortunate: this is when he finds time to carry on consecutively or at intervals some congenial labor, such as a cabinet-making, experimenting in chemistry, or making verses—the last being, however, the most unportiable and dangerous, as tend-mixed and the most unportable and dangerous, as tend-mixed and the pleasures of work and the pleasures of idleness. Though I passed that way, many months ago, and have seen him but once, the picture of him in my mind represents to me the fortunate occupation.
